Twice a year all of the major video game hardware and software companies get together to display the equipment and games that they are working on. These events are known as the Consumer Electronics Shows and the January event is held in Las Vegas, and the June show is held in Chicago. Last month the EGM staff packed up their camera equipment in order to document for you everything that was at the CES. And what a show it was! We stopped counting the new games after we hit 300 and the following pages will give you a sample of the types of carts that you will be playing later this year.

NEW CD-ROM SYSTEMS

Even though the Sega CD is only a couple of months old, there are already two new players in the CD market. One is a company called 3DO and for the specs on that $700 system check last months EGM Express. For the first pix of the system and games don't miss the story elsewhere in this issue.

The second new CD system comes from Pioneer. It is called LaserActive. This system utilizes the standard Pioneer Laser Disc player and will play a new batch of interactive CD games, but with the addition of plug-in modules, game players will be able to play Sega carts and CDs, or TTI compatible carts or CDs on this system! Don't miss the full story on this $700 system in this issues EGM Express.

SEGA

Sega demonstrated behind closed doors a new Virtual VR peripheral for the Genesis. This device, looks like the helmet model currently being used in the arcades. Sega, however, is opting for a smaller head unit and a larger Genesis interface box. This configuration will allow for longer gameplay and less fatigue as the majority of the bulky, heavy, electronics will be off the head. Sega is shooting for a release date of sometime this Fall and a system price of $200. Four games are expected to be released by the end of the year, one of which will be the arcade hit, Virtua Racing. As we reported last month, Sega has now confirmed that they will be bringing out a mouse and a 6 button controller. They could not officially say what game the controller is for but the Champion Edition of Street Fighter 2 is the most likely suspect.

Another new peripheral that will keep you hopping is called the Activator. This add on device takes Nintendo's Power Pad into the third dimension. With a system of infra-red rays the Activator can sense, and react to the movement of your arms and legs. In a fighting game, as you go through the motions of punching and kicking, your on-screen character will do the same.

Sega's gun, the Menacer was also on display, but unfortunately Sega had no new games to support this peripheral.

On the software front, Sega's biggest game was Cool Spot. The familiar red dot is off on a new adventure and from what we could see, this cart will be real hot this summer. A futuristic version of Outrun is on its way to the stores as is G-LOC. Dinosaurs for Hire is being made into a game as is X-Men. On the CD side, the overall impression we got is that Sega seems to be dragging its feet. Virtually nothing was finished. Batman, Montana, Dolphin, Sonic and Dark Wizard were all in various stages of development. The one bright side to the CD software was a game called Slipheed. It is a polygon graphics shooter of immense detail, speed and action.

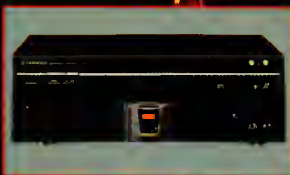

NINTENDO

The main game that Nintendo was pushing was Star Fox. This is the first of their new FX chip games and it plays quite fast. The polygons are rather coarse and the 3-D effect isn't as good as expected but, since it's Nintendo's first attempt at a polygon game, Star Fox isn't too bad. From the licensees, Atlus' Run Saber looks hot; Acclaim's Mortal Kombat will be as good as the arcade version; Hudson's 5 player Super Bomberman will be a blast when more than one player gets together; JVC's 16 meg Super Empire Strikes Back will be better than the Star Wars version; and Square's Final Fantasy Adventure 2 will take RPG's to new heights.

TURBO TECHNOLOGIES

TTI came to the CES with a lot of great games to show. Forty five to be exact! Most of them CDs too! The best of the bunch included King of the Monsters 2 and World Heroes from Working Designs and John Madden Football '93 and Lords of Thunder from TTI.

Pioneer's LaserActive CD system will play Sega and TTI carts and CDs.

EGM EXPRESS

SEGA SHOWS VIRTUAL REALITY FOR GENESIS!

At the Winter CES officials at Sega gave the EGM editors a sneak peek at one of the top secret projects that their R & D staff has been working on over the past year.

The new device is a virtual reality peripheral for the Sega's Genesis game system! It currently goes under the code name of Virtual VR and it looks very much like the VR helmet that players wear while playing the arcade game. The main difference is that Sega has been able to further reduce the size and weight of the helmet to that of a large pair of goggles by moving much of the electronics from the helmet to an interface box that sits along side the Genesis.

Sega has been developing virtual reality technology for a few years but it wasn't until just this last year when the computers could process all of the VR polygon data fast enough to make the concept a reality. Now with new programming techniques and improved data compression algorithms, elementary VR is possible on 16-Bit machines, like the Sega Genesis. While not as complex as the arcade version, Sega still states that players can easily become immersed in a completely realistic 360 degree gaming world!

The first VR game that will be coming out for Virtual VR will be a conversion of Sega's Virtua Racing Sega's new VR glasses will make 360 three dimensional gaming a reality!

PLAY GAMES ON TV EYEGLASSES!

A new company called Virtual Vision will soon be changing the way consumers watch TV. Their new product consists of a pair of 5 oz. sunglasses and a belt pack that contains a TV tuner, auxiliary interface and batteries. The interface can connect to another video source such as a camcorder or a game system.

The Virtual Vision Sport uses a new technology called virtual imaging. This process, through the use of surface mount electronics and a special optical focusing system, tricks the viewer into believing that the perceived TV image is floating in space. The virtual image is really generated by a new video system in the eyewear, but to the viewer, the image appears to be approximately 60 inches in size diagonally and out 8 to 15 feet in front of the person! The system is scheduled to cost about $900 when it comes out later this year.

A similar eyeglass TV system is also coming from Spread Spectrum Technologies. They are projecting their system to cost only about $200.

The Virtual Vision Sport Glasses bring a big screen TV image right to your eyes!

arcade machine. While not real VR per se, this super driving simulation offers several different views of the race in progress ranging from a drivers eye view to a helicopter view, high above the race track.

Sega expects that their Virtual VR will be in the stores this Fall and they are shooting for a $200 retail price. One game will be available initially (Virtua Racing) and three more - a flight simulator, a shooting game and a fantasy action game, are expected to be out by the end of the year.

Sega's first Virtual VR cart will be a conversion of their Virtua Racing arcade game.

WINTER CONSUMER ELECTRONICS SHOW SPECIAL!

3DO SYSTEM, GAMES & PERIPHERALS AT CES!

As we reported last month, there is a new 32-Bit, CD-only, game system in the works. Called 3DO, this $700 high end system features the most advanced electronics ever seen in a home game system. With specs like a 25 MHz 32-Bit CPU, 16 megabit of system memory, a palette of 16 million colors to choose from, a double speed CD drive, and expansion ports for everything from full motion MPEG video cards to MIDI, it's no wonder that over 80 companies have become official 3DO licensees!

Just as we were there with the story straight from Trip Hawkins in our last issue, this month we have the system, peripheral and game screen pix straight from 3DO. Also included are a few special sneak preview pix from Electronic Arts on their upcoming 3DO games.

First pictures of Panasonic's version of the 3DO 32-Bit CD system!

SUPER NES

In the typical Super NES vs. Genesis battle, the Super Nintendo clearly had the larger amount of new software at the CES. At the top of the list is Nintendo's new FX chip game, Star Fox. While the polygon graphics were rather coarse and there was little evidence of 3-D shading, the game speed and gameplay more than made up for the minor problems that we noticed while playing Star Fox. This definitely is going to be the game to get this Spring.

The licensees have also been busy working on their new games for later this year. Right near the top will be Super Empire Strikes Back from JVC/Lucasfilm. In talking with the people at Lucasfilm, they state that as good as Super Star Wars was, Super Empire will be that much better! Current plans call for more use of Mode 7 along with smoother animations, more detailed graphics, better voice and an improved soundtrack. Quite an ambitious project, but considering how well Lucasfilm did with SSW, Super Empire just might be the hot game this Fall.

Other good games that we saw included a 16 megabit Mortal Kombat coming from Acclaim; a hot new action game called Run Saber from Atlus; a very nice sequel to Final Fight from Capcom; a spectacular boxing simulation that uses actual historic boxing statistics and features large digitized characters called Legends of the Ring from Electro Brain; a great multiplayer party game, Super Bomberman, that makes full use of Hudson's new 5 player adapter; and a spectacular new RPG entitled Final Fantasy Adventure 2 from Square Soft.

In other non-news, Capcom intends to remain quiet as to whether they will bring out a Champion Edition, or a Turbo CE of their Street Fighter 2 for the Super NES.

Besides checking out all the new carts, our editors got to take a sneak peek at a few new controllers, a top secret Super NES modem, and even a portable Super Nintendo system! All of these and more will be spotlighted in the coming months.

GENESIS

Sega normally has a light showing at the Winter CES as they prefer to introduce their hot games at the Summer show. What they did have on display was good, but, for the most part, not spectacular.

Perhaps the best news to come from Sega was hardware rather than software related.

Their newest peripheral is called Virtual VR. This device is a full color virtual reality peripheral. Similar in design to the VR arcade headsets, Sega has been able to shrink the size down to something a bit larger than a pair of sunglasses. They did this by moving most of the bulky electronics from the headset to a separate box which sits next to the Genesis. Three games, including their hot arcade title Virtua Racing, will be available when it comes out this Fall. Sega expects it to sell for about $200.

In addition, Sega's 6 button controller, mouse and Activator were on display. Not bad for a 'noneventful' January show!

On the software side, Sega had a few new games on display. Most notable was Cool Spot which Virgin will develop but Sega will sell.

X-Men played well as did an adaptation of the new comic book - Dinosaurs for Hire. Outrun 2019 and G-LOC are updates of the older driving and flying carts, and Cyborg Justice looked like a good action game. RPG fans will be happy as Sega has confirmed that Shining Force, Land Stalker and Phantasy Star 4 will be coming out in Spring, Fall and early 1994 respectively.

On the license front, Electronic Arts is moving ahead with their new baseball cart which will be endorsed by Tony La Russa; Flying Edge is doing a carbon-copy version of the arcade hit Mortal Kombat for this fall; Namco has hot updates to their Rolling Thunder and Splatterhouse games; Takara will continue to do Neo-Geo conversions like Fatal Fury; and U.S. Gold has the long awaited sequel to the mega-hot Strider ready for later this year. And, last but not least, Sega will have Toe Jam and Earl coming back for a second appearance but in a whole new world!

SEGA CD

Last June when Sega first started to talk about their upcoming Sega CD, they stated that there would be over two dozen CDs that would be ready when the peripheral was released in November 1992. As that day approached, the number of CD games that would actually be in the stores started to get fewer and fewer. When the system finally hit the shelves, the number of CDs from Sega could be counted on one hand. Where did all the games go to? Since they didn't make it out by Christmas, we hoped that there would be dozens of great CDs at the CES. Wrong! Not only were there only a few CDs on display, what was shown was very incomplete. Batman only had a few playable levels, Joe Montana looked good but was a demo only, Dolphin CD was only a tape, the RPG Dark Wizard was the untranslated Japanese version, Citizen-X was a demo and CD Sonic the Hedgehog was nowhere to be seen.

On the positive side, Final Fight CD looked very good. As we've shown in the past, it is a two player game and you can select from all three characters. Afterburner 3 CD was finished but that was no surprise as it has been out in Japan for a couple of months already. It unfortunately looks and plays like a 'first generation' CD game. The Make Your Own Music Video CDs are continuing as two more featuring INXS and Marky Mark and the Funky Bunch are on their way. They looked hot.

On a new line, Sega demonstrated the first of their Virtual VCR games - Prince. Utilizing new data compression techniques, Sega has been able to put one hour of actual video footage on a CD. With this program you can play, pause, fast forward or rewind the 'video' just as you would a VCR tape! A second disc - March of Time will take this concept and use it as an educational tool.

But, the hottest CD news is something which Sega didn't even talk about! It is the game Silpheed. This CD is a polygon graphics shooter that blows away Nintendo's Star Fox! More next month!

TURBODUO

Turbo Technologies came to the CES ready to show that it is serious about its new Turbo-Duo System. And to back up the system, they showed 45 new games which will be coming out in the next few months. Their main focus was CD and to that end, 34 of the 45 games were CDs! Backed by a huge development staff in Japan, T.T.I. stressed that players who bought the Duo didn't have to wait months for new CD software as Sega players do.

Of all of their games, the best was Lords of Thunder. It, like its predecessor - Gate of Thunder, is a shooter and this sequel is better than anything ever seen on the Turbo Duo. The action is intense and nonstop. The graphics are colorful and detailed. Backed by one of the best soundtracks ever, this CD ranked among the best games at the show!

Besides Lords of Thunder, there are other sequels in the works. Both Bonk and Zonk are coming to CD as is a follow-up to the great RPG - Dungeon Explorer. Hudson got the rights to do SimEarth along with Dragon Slayer 2. Konami's hot PC Engine titles Gradius 2 and Snatcher are on their way over here as is ICOM's thinker - Sherlock Holmes 2.

For multiplayer action, T.T.I. will have a new five-player version of Bomberman which easily is the best party game ever made. Battle Lode Runner continues this series as you search for gold while trying to out-manuever your on-screen opponents.

Everybody has to have a street fighting game and T.T.I. is no exception. Riot Zone is scheduled for the first half of this year and Fighting Street 2 CE (Turbo?) is being negotiated for a second half release.

Working Designs is continuing to support the Turbo Duo and they have locked up the license rights to do CD versions of the hot Neo-Geo arcade hits - World Heroes and King of the Monsters 2. They also are going to release Cosmic Fantasy 3, Exile: Wicked Phenomenon, and Vastel.

NINTENDO

It comes as no surprise that there wasn't a lot of new software for the old 8-Bit NES at this show. Even though Nintendo officials at their press conference proudly stood up and stated that they sold 2.7 million 8-Bit systems and 28 million NES games in 1992, this news evidently had no effect in convincing the Nintendo licensees to continue developing new software for the NES. All of the licensees have moved up to the Super NES and only a few brave companies have decided to stick it out in 8-Bit land a while longer.

The hottest NES news, is, of all things, Street Fighter 2 for the 8-Bit. Officials at Capcom state that this game will not come from either U.S. Capcom or Capcom of Japan, but rather it is being sublicensed out to another company. What we will see from Capcom though, is Mighty Final Fight. This cart features short, squat, small characters (Guy, Haggar and Cody) in a side-scrolling punch-and-kick game.

The best NES game at the show came from Tradewest. They have combined the characters from their Battletoads and Double Dragon to make a new two-player side-scrolling cart.

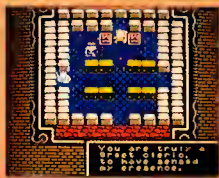

Many of the other new NES carts were conversions of games that have, or are being made for all the formats. Cool World, Lethal Weapon 3, Super Turrican, Home Alone 2 and James Bond Jr. are examples of games that will be seen across the board.

Nintendo itself hasn't completely abandoned the 8-Bit market, although they aren't setting the world afire with tons of hot games or new technology either. For the first half of this year they will have a color version of the GB cart Kirby's Adventure and another Tetris clone called Yoshi's Cookie.

What is interesting though, is the fact that Nintendo could have revived the NES market with a new Zelda adventure. Instead, they have bypassed their NES and decided to offer the new 4 megabit quest game, called The Legend of Zelda - Link's Awakening, to GameBoy players. Nice move Nintendo!
